MINERS' HEADS WITHDRAW THE ORDER FOR A STRIKE

Decide To Submit To the Order of the Federal Court At Indianapolis

Washington Greatly Relieved—Wilson Will Appeal for a Conference

(Canadian Press Wire.)
Washington, Nov. 11.—President Wilson probably will telegraph both the coal operators and officials of the United Mine Workers of America, asking them to get together and settle their differences, it was said today at the White House. At the same time the President probably will renew his offer of the services of the Government toward mediation.
Government officials here received with indignant relief news of the announcement in Indianapolis early today that the executives of the United Mine Workers of America had voted to call off the nation-wide strike of soft coal miners, as directed by Federal Judge Anderson.
The Cabinet met at 10 o'clock this morning, an hour earlier than usual, so members might be at the Union Station at noon to greet the Prince of Wales on his arrival from Canada.
JUDGE APPROVES ORDER.
Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 11.—Judge Anderson, in Federal Court, at 10 o'clock this morning, approved the order of the executive board of the United Mine Workers of America calling off the strike of bituminous coal miners.
WILL SUBMIT.
Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 11.—The United Mine Workers of America, through its general committee, decided early today to obey the mandate of U. S. District Judge A. B. Anderson, which means the recall of the order for a strike of 25,000 bituminous coal miners of the nation. The decision was reached at 4:10 this morning, after more than 17 hours' discussion. The conference then adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.
Acting President John L. Lewis, of the Mine Workers, made the following statement:
"Gentlemen, we will comply with the mandate of the court. We do it under protest. We are Americans. We cannot fight our Government. That is all."
None of the other members of the general committee, composed of international officers, district presidents, and members of the Executive Board and Scale Committee, would comment on the action, and Mr. Lewis, who appeared tired and worn out by the long discussion, declined to add anything to his statement. The members of the committee, practically all of whom remained until the final adjournment, also seemed tired out, and soon dispersed.
No draft of the order rescinding the strike, which, under Judge Anderson's plan, would be submitted to his approval, and be on its way to all local, sub-districts and districts organizations by 6 o'clock this evening, had been made when the conference adjourned, it was said, and no indication of what it would contain could be learned.
The recall of the strike order will open the way immediately for a resumption of the negotiations between the miners and the operators, as the operators have announced that they would be ready to consider a new wage agreement at any time the strike order was withdrawn. It also was understood that the question of arbitration entered largely into the discussion in the final stages of the meeting, but the miners' position on this subject was not announced.

WILL MINERS OBEY?

The question of just how many of the coal diggers would obey the order rescinding the strike was problematical early today. In some districts it was considered that the resumption of work would be general, while in others it would be only partial, and in some, it was said, the return would be very slow.
The meeting was probably the most momentous ever held by the miners' organization, if not the most weighty ever conducted by a labor organization in this country, for, in the view of labor leaders, it was to determine whether an organization would be forced by Governmental pressure through the courts to discontinue a strike, when apparently all the members of the union were behind the walk-out, which was being conducted without any form of violence or damage to property.
The official minutes of the United Mine Workers of America, which brought about the strike of approximately 25,000 bituminous coal miners of the United States, were drafted by the scale committee of the Cleveland convention of the organization, held last September, which also adopted the following resolution:
"We recommend that in event a satisfactory wage agreement is not secured for the central competitive field—Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, and western Pennsylvania before Nov. 1, 1919, to replace the one now in effect, that the international officials be authorized, and are hereby instructed, to call a general strike of all bituminous miners and mine workers throughout the United States, the same to become effective Nov. 1, 1919."
The main point of the miners' demands included a 60 per cent. increase in wages, a six-hour day from eight to ten, a five-day week, and time and a half for overtime, and on Sundays and legal holidays. The joint wage conference of the operators and mine workers met in Philadelphia Oct. 31 and adjourned Oct. 31, failing to reach an agreement. The call for the strike at midnight Oct. 31 was issued from the international headquarters of the union here Oct. 15.

LAST BANQUET

Arrangement for Final of Soldier Series.

At a meeting of the Citizens' Registration League Executive, held last evening, it was decided to give the tenth and last banquet to returned soldiers on the evening of Tuesday, November 25th. In the Royal Connaught Hotel, beginning at 7 o'clock, the league will endeavor to make this last banquet the best. Applications for tickets may be made to the Soldier's Aid Commission, Mr. Atwell's book store, 197 King street east, after Thursday of this week. Both these places are open in the evening.

STORM IN STATES

Nebraska and Colorado Badly Tied Up.

(Canadian Press Wire.)
Chicago, Nov. 11.—A severe storm swept over the north and middle central states today, but tonight was expected to expend itself largely before reaching the great lakes. Thermometers, however, dropped about 15 degrees in Chicago to-night, although there was not expected a change would be attended by precipitation.
In the middle western states, where the storm attained its greatest proportions, trains were delayed from four to twelve hours. The heaviest high on the tracks running through Nebraska and Colorado. Practically all telegraph and telephone service in the affected regions were crippled.
The storm was continuing its north-easterly movement to-night over western Lake Superior.

CROSSLEY MEETINGS

This is Last Week of Special Services.

This is the last week of the Crossley evangelistic campaign in Hamilton. Special Methodist Church, large congregations have been secured. The campaign is being conducted by Rev. C. H. Crossley, who is a very practical, sane and convincing speaker. He is a heart in the people of the city. As this week closes the campaign in Hamilton's Methodist Church naturally both pastor and evangelist are expecting a harvest of souls. Tonight, Mr. Crossley speaks on "Wrong Views of Hell." While to-morrow night his subject is "The Dangers and the Cards." Large crowds are anticipated in view of the interest attaching to these subjects. Next Sunday the campaign will be brought to a close.

CENTENARY MEN

(A. P. Special Cable.)
Cork, Nov. 11.—(By the Associated Press)—Violent collisions between the military and civilians here culminated in a riotous scene last night, when soldiers engaged in consequence of frequent abuse upon them, broke through the police and came into conflict with the crowd.
Sticks and stones were freely used, and belts were removed and forcefully swung. There were also a few revolver shots. A captain and a private of the troops were badly wounded. The police eventually dispersed the crowd, and got the soldiers back to their barracks.

Heard Interesting Address By Miss Harvey.
The regular meeting of Century Men's Club was held last night in the Sunday school room. About seventy-five members were present. Miss Florence Harvey, one of Hamilton's best war workers, and whose experience overseas have been widely varied, was the guest of honor, and gave a brief talk on her experiences in Roumania and Serbia. The audience was highly entertained, suffering, which are not by any means over yet, as observed by one engaged in relief work, proved very interesting to all present.

"Lest We Forget"

Whoever you may be, go into your room to-day and sit quietly for a few minutes. Canada asks you for these minutes in Meditation upon Her Immortals.

Their spirit, the spirit of devotion to duty, of love of Canada and of home that illuminated their lives and made glorious their death, still lives. May it live in you and in me. May we be so inspired that from now onward, constrained by the love of Canada, we may ever advance her interests, ever work for a greater and more glorious Canada.

To-day is a day of memory, of thanksgiving, and to-day Canada has indeed the right to require from you a thanks offering. But no such demand is made. Canada simply asks you to the fullest extent of your capacity to advance her trade, production, and prosperity, and by so doing help yourself, protect your family, increase your income and all without risk.

KAMLADEVI'S DANCE

Weird Ceremony of Moroccan Religious Sect.

The dancers were all dressed in white caftans or in the blue shirts of the lowest classes. In the sunlight something that looked like fresh red paint glistened on their shaved black or yellow skulls and made large blotches on their garments. At first these stripes and stains suggested only a gaudy ritual ornament like the patterns on the drums; then one saw that the paint or whatever it was, kept dripping down from the whirling raffans and formed fresh pools among the stones; then as one of the pools dried up another formed, redder and more glistening, and that these pools were fed from great gashes which the dancers hacked in their skulls and breasts with hatchets and sharpened stones, says an article by Edith Wharton in Scribner's. The dance was a blood rite, a great sacrificial symbol, in which blood flowed so freely that the dancing feet were washed with it. Traditionally, however, it became a dance that atoned for sins. It was danced, without bawling and shouting, and that aspect of the dance was the one that appealed to negroes. Every now and then the dance was held in another figure, black or dark yellow, the figures of some humble or blue-shirted peasant suddenly getting religion, and then dancing to the strains of a hymn and baptizing himself with his own blood, and in each new recent group of dances the same thing has happened. The devotees howled and roared and danced, and the women, who were still in the centre, the maddened and beautiful young women, the black and white, blacked him and pulled in their diamond eyes.

Such is the dance of the Mambochar,

Explosive Power of Dust.

Dust in almost any form seems to have some explosive possibilities. It has been established in the experimental mine of the Bureau of Mines at Bruceton, Pa., that a mixture of 200-inch Pittsburg coal dust with shale dust, in the proportion of 30 per cent. coal to 70 per cent. shale will propagate an explosion. The volatile content of this mixture is about 12 per cent. nearly 100 per cent. black. While this coal dust that of gas black. While this coal dust mixture is about 15 per cent. carbon, the gas black is 85 per cent. carbon. It is apparent that if the gas black is exposed to the finely divided carbon rather than to the volatile content. Generally speaking, the finer a dust, the more easily it is ignited. In connection with these factory explosions, the author has conducted experiments on the inflammability of soot. It could not explode a mixture of 80 per cent. and not otherwise non-explosive could be made to explode by introducing a soot cloud.

Righted in Time

Suddenly Moya sat up from the floor. She put one trembling hand on the back of her chair.

"It isn't, mater," she said, in a low, choked voice. "You know it. It isn't that—not that!"

The words were incoherent. But Moya did not wait either to say or hear any others. She went away into the further corner of the garden, and from thence to the cool solitude of the shore.

The morning haze was still over the sea. Everything was lovely and serene. Moya sat down on the arm of the breakfast, and the cool breeze fanned her hot face.

Back again came Barry's laughing words that he might be helping her out of one hole into a worse one. She had done this to save her pride. Then why was she sitting there, feeling so humiliated?

She gazed down at the clear spray, leaping gracefully in little jets and eddies of pure crystal in the wind. Her feet. Then she caught a sound of clattering stone, and looking up, she saw Guy Berkeley coming down the cliff path.

He must see her, of course, outlined as she was against the blue water, as she sat perched on the old breakfast table. But he would not come to speak to her—after this.

Yet he came on, and Moya perceived that probably he had come purely to speak to her. For he picked his way round the pools of outgoing tide, and he reached the breakfast table. Then he looked at her with a friendly, frank smile.

"I've come to congratulate you," he said. "I've not had a chance before, but now I have."

Now those words took Moya back. At best she had expected him to ignore the subject which had occasioned that painful little scene in the breakfast room. She did not think to find him raised a spout.

He went on without waiting for her reply. "I know what you're feeling—bitter that a mere stranger should so suddenly hear this. But I don't want you to think of me as a mere stranger."

I want you to think of me as a friend. That's why I'm here. I don't speak about it at once. I want to give you my good wishes for the future. I heard what Mrs. Raleigh said, of course. But I want you to know that I believe that youth often has the best in life—and nearly always knows the best and purest of love. A boy and a girl affair—why, it means a setting out in life together. It means all the joys of the future. And when you know each other pretty well all your lives, as I understand you have done—no, I want you to know that I, for one, don't laugh at it. I, for one, give you all my heart and hope you will keep true to each other, and win the happiness that only true love can give."

Moya looked silently at him. His grey eyes were kind and a little pitying. It came to her suddenly that she was thinking she was fatherless, and realized that a mother's unselfish love never failed.

"Are you thinking, why I say that?" he asked. "Because I am your friend. And I think one day perhaps you will need a friend. When you do, think of me."

He laid his hand lightly for a second on the one which played with clinging weeds of seaweed on the old breakfast table. His whole manner was kind and protecting.

Something like the place of a dear father, and protect his little sister from a hard, unkind world. Moya all at once felt a sob in his throat, while a wave of shame colored her from brow to hair.

What was she doing to take this man's sympathy and kindness? She could say if she wanted to. "All pretence," Moya's loving words of congratulation had been so much more than she had right to the beautiful offer of being his friend. What would be if he knew what a trivial little wretch she was?

Her mother's words came back to her. "What was she doing to take this man's sympathy and kindness?" she thought. THREE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-FOURTH CHAPTER

Every Woman's Ambition For Fussy Checks Now Easily Satisfied

Yellow checks with dark lines under the eyes, how a woman hates them. But every check, clear skin, and bright eyes, give them as a woman and a man.

The woman who attracts, whose mind, delicately complexion, and health, is always careful of her health, particularly of her blood, and old-time feeling of youth, always means bad blood.

Girls don't let your blood grow thin so water. To do so brings a hard look and declining strength. Every woman who has allowed herself to run down, to develop that worried look has built up against her simple way. Why don't you try it?

At the close of every meal, just take two small chocolate-coated Perouse Tablets—any person can do this in a minute. The action of Perouse is apparent at once. It sets you into a spider's web, but it was useless for me to struggle until I had that sweet little baby in my arms. And then? Then—The Hon. James D. Lorimer could be trusted to attend to it. Berghoff disappeared under the roofed gate, his mind whirled through a chain of surmises concerning their old meeting.

Was the ghost which Jim, Jun, had discovered and addressed as Dr. Corbett, some impostor working Chrys, through Berghoff? The girl herself was the soul of honor. She was practical, too, and to be fooled only along the line of her one weakness for her cousin, Bob.

I had plenty to occupy my mind as I walked home. Bob hadn't had his breakfast? I wanted to tell him he was a perfect draf for waiting. I wanted to pour my morning experiences into his ears, but the tension between us was too great. I felt that I must tell him more about my life in Corbett's house. But I couldn't forget that I had often stopped my explanations—and had then seized upon the dreadful hints from Katherine Miller's curved red lips!

If Bob ever wanted to know any more about what had happened to her, he was with the A. E. F. he would have to ask for the knowledge.

In the afternoon, I went over to drink tea with Mother Lorimer. Her heart would be breaking over the dreadful revelation in Benjie's letter. I was the only woman with whom she could discuss it.

I met Katherine Miller in the hall of the Lorimer house. As mother had said, she came and went like one of the family, yet she had never been liked by either Mrs. or Mr. Lorimer.

Katherine met me with her usual superior smile. She regretted that Mrs. Lorimer was ill and unable to see her. She condescended with me about the loss of Bob.

"It has hurt us all, awfully," I agreed. "Only the child's own mother could feel what she has done added maliciously."

An Amazing Meeting and a Clash of Wit With the Siren.

I brushed the red and gold leaves, wet with the cold October dew, from a bench behind a screen of bittersweet, and sat down to meditate upon the familiar envelope and the strange address. Bob was awake, I knew. He might wonder what had become of me. I decided to stay out of doors until after he had had his breakfast. It would give him quite a shock, perhaps, but the shock would do him good.

I stayed longer than I intended to do, building up and tearing down a dozen theories about the scrap of paper.

I saw Berghoff arrive, and I kept very still lest he should see me. He counted his bills, and pocketed them. Turning to assure me that he had departed, I beheld the lovely Christy Cretney coming down the lane between the elms. She too, was to enjoy the splendid autumn morning. I concluded, but my supposition was spoiled by an amazing incident.

Berghoff went directly to her, as if he had been waiting to keep an appointment with her! After a few respectful sentences, he handed her an envelope—and it was a duplicate of the one I held in my hand!

Was she stupified. What letter could that dreadful man have which was valuable to my sister-in-law? Which was so unusual that it must be delivered in person, rather than sent through the mail?

Berghoff was certainly a clever villain, to make three respectable young women pay him for important information. I felt like a fly in a spider's web, but it was useless for me to struggle until I had that sweet little baby in my arms. And then? Then—The Hon. James D. Lorimer could be trusted to attend to it. Berghoff disappeared under the roofed gate, his mind whirled through a chain of surmises concerning their old meeting.

Was the ghost which Jim, Jun, had discovered and addressed as Dr. Corbett, some impostor working Chrys, through Berghoff? The girl herself was the soul of honor. She was practical, too, and to be fooled only along the line of her one weakness for her cousin, Bob.

THE NAVAL POLICY

Coal May Be Brought From the East and West.

OTTAWA, Nov. 10.—The special session of Parliament, called primarily to ratify the Peace Treaty, came to a close this afternoon at half-past four o'clock. The work of the Commons was concluded this morning, and when the members of the lower chamber gathered at three in the afternoon there was no more for them to do.

There was a slim attendance of members in the lower House. The Black Rod came to summon them to the Senate chamber for the closing ceremonies. His Excellency the Governor-General arrived about half-past five, and the Speech from the Throne was shortly delivered, and the session was over.

When the House of Commons met, Mr. J. A. Calder moved that the resolution of the Committee on the "Civil Re-establishment Bill" be embodied in the records, and also that 1,000 copies in English and 500 copies in French be printed for distribution.

HELDON RAILWAY. Mr. J. A. Campbell, Hon. C. J. Doherty, who was leading the House, stated it was estimated that it would cost approximately $7,750,000 for laying steel rails in the lower House. The Trent Rapids to Port Nelson. Work on the Hudson Bay Railway, Trent and Port Nelson, was discussed during the day. During the afternoon, the work was resumed on the Welland and Trent Canals for the purpose of giving work to the unemployed.

Mr. J. A. Campbell asked if the Government proposed to comply with the request of the House of Commons to call the next session as early as possible in the year.

Mr. Doherty said the House would meet again early in 1920. Mr. Ernest Lapointe, Quebec, asked if he read a newspaper article which stated that the Government was planning to call the next session in Canada. He asked if he was right in assuming that the Government was planning to call the next session in Canada.

Mr. Doherty replied that the Government would call the next session in Canada. He said that the Government was planning to call the next session in Canada. He said that the Government was planning to call the next session in Canada.

and local boards. The Senate amendments to the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Bill were considered. The Speech from the Throne was as follows: "Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, I have the honor to announce to you the results of the Peace Conference at Versailles."

"In receiving you from further attendance on this session I thank you for the diligence and efficiency with which you have discharged your duties. Measures of great significance and importance have engaged your attention. The Treaty of Peace concluded by the allied and associated powers with Germany and signed at Versailles on the 28th June, 1919, and the Treaty of Peace with Austria, signed at St. Germain, on the 10th September, 1919, have been presented to you and have received your approval. These treaties have been approved by the allied and associated powers on the one hand, and by at least three of the great powers on the other hand, and will, I trust, be the means of bringing about the cessation of hostilities and the establishment of peace and order in the world."

"The visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to Canada has been a source of deep and widespread satisfaction. The universal welcome which has been extended to him is an evidence of the devotion of the Canadian people to the throne and to British institutions. This visit, so wisely timed in character, and so personally characterized, and of such high quality, is a source of great satisfaction to the Canadian people, and it is a source of great satisfaction to the British people, and it is a source of great satisfaction to the world."
